The Bulletin of the Botanical Society of Western Pennsylvania • May and June 2005

The Next Meeting is June 13

The next meeting will be Monday, June 13, 7:15 p.m., at the A. J. Palumbo Hall-Room 315, Carlow University, 3333 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, PA (Oakland). As you approach the campus on Fifth Avenue (heading toward downtown Pittsburgh), do not turn right into the Carlow Campus entrance. Instead, pass the entrance, stay in the right lane, and make the immediate right into the parking area. Park here and cross the street.

This is our somewhat annual “Botanical Lab” session. Dr. Haywood has arranged a meeting in one of the university’s state-of-the-art teaching laboratories. Here we will examine plant specimens under a microscope and learn about plant morphology.

Improve your botanical skills (is it epigynous or hypogynous?) and explore the plant world up-close (where is the filament?). Feel free to bring your own plants to examine under the microscope. Join us at the A. J. Palumbo Hall – Room 315, at 7:15 p.m. Place a note on your dashboard saying “Botanical Society Meeting,” or use your parking permit.

The Botanical Society of Western Pennsylvania will soon have a new website. Look for details on the next newsletter.

What Happens When Botanical Society Members Step Out

“So it was the best of worlds last Sunday during the annual spring wildflower walk through Enlow Fork, a fantastically diverse, puritanically immersed and botanically a-burst haven not easily reached, but once discovered, never forgotten.

With Sister Mary Joy leading the way, the walk...combined knowledge and foliage, vast greenery framed by spectacular scenery, accented with her informed soliloquy about wildflowers that mixed ivory-tower science with flower-powered enigma. Sister Mary Joy is not one to hurry a wildflower tour. All the better to stop every few paces along the trail through the nature preserve to point out wildflowers with her black cane swinging left then right, high then low, on the berm then on the bank. Here's golden ragweed. There's some stitchwort and Dutchman's breeches. Look at the oriole in the tree, and notice the redbud tree in the distance.”

Excerpted from “Enlow Fork Natural Area an explosion of natural colors” by David Templeton in the Sunday, May 8 online edition of the Post-Gazette, www.post-gazette.com

““This is one of my favorite stomping grounds,” said Esther Allen, of Ross. She and Barbara Schomer, of Mt. Lebanon, were on a nature hike, looking for spring wildflowers. Within a few minutes, they had found a white violet, trillium in several colors, wild geranium, wild ginger, a jack-in-the-pulpit and two varieties of soon-to-bloom Solomon's seal.

The stone cliffs, creek banks, marshland, tree-shaded areas and open glade along the trail create a number of micro-environments that encourage many varieties of wild plants, they explained.”

Excerpted from “Ivan’s Mark Still Visible on Trail” by Len Barcoucky in the Sunday, May 15

online edition of the Post-Gazette, www.post-gazette.com

“Twenty people came to enjoy the lovely spring day with a walk on the Erie National Wildlife Refuge's newest trail. Highlights of the day were an American Redstart, Hooded Warbler, white and red trilliums, wild geraniums, Jacks-in-the-Pulpit, various violets and other wildflowers.

And members of the group shared interesting bits of information. We learned that the trolley line from Cambridge Springs to Titusville that this trail was named for never actually existed. Although the bed was leveled, the rail was never laid and it was not used for transportation. The rise of the automobile caused the project to be abandoned. (Yes, back then the auto companies began their work to undermine mass transit.)

We also learned the origin of the common name of the Amelanchier tree—serviceberry, or sarvisberry, was derived from its bloom time. Because it blooms in early to mid-spring around the time the ground thaws, early settlers used it as a harbinger of spring thaw, leading to religious burial services, as well as wedding and Easter services, when the traveling preachers would make their rounds in the southern Appalachians. When folks died in the winter when the ground was frozen, their bodies were wrapped and stored in the shed till spring thaw and the arrival of the preacher.”
